

Latterly, of Philadelphia, won the 3:20 pace from a field of ten, in 2:14 1-2. The race, which was for a purse of $2,000, went four heats. Hanks Bell, owned by T. B. Snyder, of Philadelphia, Pa., finished second, and Wonder Worthy, owned by O. H. Erskine, of Philadelphia, N. Y., won third place.

Free Acts Take Well.
The holiday crowd crowded over the free acts, and pronounced them the best yet. The program began at 10 o'clock in the morning, with the concert in industrial hall by Stein's Band, and finished late at night with the fireworks. In between worked the auto polo players, Peolia, the Italian aviator; Hutchison and his assistant of the high balloon, the Jolly Harvesters, the dancers, jugglers, casters, boxers and girl divers, that add gaiety to Virginia's big fall festival.

Spurred on by the desire to do what they could to involve the hands of the threatening skies, the free acts were performed with an abandon that was not part of the contract. The Pattee troupe worked in several of the numbers, and the Cycling Demons took an extra devilish turn or two. Madame Hammer, in prima donna fashion, and Mace Gay's band, in front of the grandstand, maintained a Damrosch gait and never tired.

Ballyhoo Lane Unquenched.
Ballyhoo Lane spent a disconsolate morning, but recouped when the afternoon and night brought a flood of easy money. The crowd, which had been several of the shows talked of pulling up stakes and moving to sunnier lands, but the stern hand of the fair association took hold of matters and stamped out the insurrection. With the end of the last race, the 6,000 in the grandstand joined a crowd of double that number already in the lane, and the showmen's hearts grew light at once. So did the pocketbooks of the pikers. By piker here is meant one who strolls the pike. Country and city cousins alike succumbed to the lure of the rough posies and gave up their times to be shown.

With darkness came the boob with the confetti and the feeble-minded with the pom-poms. Business men invested in Teddy bears and pocket dogs, and girls consented to be led into ghastly tinsy parlors. Throughout the night a slow-moving, unbroken human river moved through the Midway, revealing the wiles of the showmen and the yawn of the speller, picking confetti out of its ears, and falling for the three-score and ten attractions, good, bad and indifferent, that make up this year's joy pike.

Got Them Hot.
Over the sharp impact of the barker's whip against carmine canvas, more intense than the pistol shots that called attention to the wonders of a trip to the moon, louder even than the blaring melody of the merry-go-rounds, rose the cry of the seller of frankfurters: "Get them while they're hot, gents, get them while they're hot."

The crowd got them while they were hot and greasy and the savor of frying dogs hovered strong over the lane. The grandstand was packed again at night to witness the evening performance of the free acts, and to see the fireworks. Those who could not gain entrance watched the display from the race-track fence. The canvases of Sampson and Cervara fought again the battle of Santiago, and the crowd cheered when the last yellow and white banner of Spain sank beneath the waves, and the sea itself turned inside out under the murderous Roman Candles of the Yankee ships.

Prize Winners Parade.
Richmond Day divided much more than diversion. The serious business of the fair was as much in evidence as its amusements. Stock judging went on as usual, and at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon the ribbon winners were suspended to parade before the grandstand. The giant Percherons of the United States

Big Basement Department.

Yards, of Chicago, led the procession. Behind them trailed the sleek horses, cattle and ponies, picked by the judges.

Industrial Hall was crowded until the closing hour. The county exhibits with their marvelous displays of grains and grasses, apples and alfalfa attracted countrymen and city dwellers by the thousands. The dog show, one of the big features of the fair, drew young and old, although unlike the other live exhibits, there was a small admittance charge.
